Neighbourhood Lenzsiedlung: an area of movement and exercise

The residential area Lenzsiedlung with a dimension of 7.5 ha and 3.000 tenants has the highest population density in Hamburg. 40% of the tenants are children and teenagers which is extraordinarily high. Around 40% of the tenants have a migration background. Most of the housing stocks are owned by the public housing company SAGA.

The few public areas are not enough for the large number of children and teenagers. With the aim, to create the free space for the Lenzsiedlung and the bordering housing area, the project “movement spaces Lenzsiedlung” was established in cooperation with the program social city development and the project “Spielraum Stadt”.

The project was assisted by a working group consisted of people from the sport club, the association “Lenzsiedlung e.V. for kids”, teenagers and the community, the public housing company SAGA, the public administration and the program social city development in collaboration with the tenants. In conjunction with the project “Spielraum Stadt” a participation project was established between 2000 and 2001.

Together with the tenants and the social district manager, ideas for the new public area creation were compiled. Originated are paintings, models and collages. The ideas became part of the planning. The result was strong identification with the new public area among the tenants and decries of vandalism.

In 2004 the project won the prize “social city 2004”. The jury showed this because of the inclusion of different groups in the project, creativity and the public.
